The idea developed is sophisticated, communicating people's fragile relationship with nature and impact on the environment. The clock symbolises that time is running out, the cogs represent time moving on and the urgency in which we need to respond. The broken glass dome and falling rose petals also show how nature is being destroyed. The work uses acrylic paint and pencil crayon combinations which were tested in 'Development' and links back to the artists studied. The composition was also carefully planned and considered and research uses primary sources.

Year 10 Coursework example Spill, drop, break

Present

Refine/Experiment

Evidence within the work of skilful experimentation with a broad range of materials and techniques; Pencil, Acrylic paint, water-colour paint, Pastels and pencil crayons. Experimentation with different compositions/ layouts.

This was one of three artist research boards connected to the theme. Primary research including students own photographs and observation included. The quality of recording and annotation is excellent.
